To those of the white race who look to the incoming of those of foreign birth and strange tongue and habits for the prosperity of the South, were I permitted I would repeat what I say to my own race, “Cast down your bucket where you are.” Cast it down among the eight millions of Negroes whose habits you know, whose fidelity and love you have tested in days when to have proved treacherous meant the ruin of your firesides. Cast down your bucket among these people who have, without strikes and labour wars, tilled your fields, cleared your forests, builded your railroads and cities, and brought forth treasures from the bowels of the earth, and helped make possible this magnificent representation of the progress of the South.

Explanations

2. In the Plessy v. Ferguson decision, the Supreme Court ruled that racial segregation was allowed if equal facilities were offered. This policy was known as "separate but equal." Even though African Americans would have access to separate facilities, they were almost always inferior to those that were reserved for the use of white people.

3. After the Civil War, the Ku Klux Klan started lynching African Americans in order to maintain white supremacy in the South. Members of the Ku Klux Klan did not agree with the new laws granting rights to African Americans that went into effect during Reconstruction.

5. Disenfranchisement occurs when someone is denied the opportunity to do something that they legally have the right to do. Even after the 15th Amendment was ratified in 1870, many African Americans were still not able to vote. Southern states began imposing various restrictions on voting, such as requiring voters to pass a literacy test or pay a poll tax before being able to vote.

7. W.E.B. DuBois is a well-known African American leader of the Progressive Era. He started the Niagara Movement, which lead to the establishment of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP). To improve the status of blacks, DuBois advocated sending gifted African American students to university and into the white world, where they could then work to elevate all blacks.

8. The use of literacy tests and poll taxes prevented most African Americans from voting, but they prevented some whites from voting as well. Poor whites who were unable to pass the literacy test or could not afford to pay the poll tax had been prevented from voting. In 1898, Southern states began enacting grandfather clauses as a way to allow poor whites the right to vote, but at the same time denying African Americans the right to vote. Since very few African Americans had the right to vote in 1867, the grandfather clauses excluded them from voting while protecting the right to vote for whites.

11. W.E.B. DuBois is a well-known African American leader of the Progressive Era. He started the Niagara Movement, which lead to the establishment of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP). To improve the status of blacks, DuBois advocated sending gifted African American students to university and into the white world, where they could then work to elevate all blacks.

12. The Tuskegee Institute was founded in 1881. Booker T. Washington served as the leader of the college from 1881 until 1915. During his time at the college, Washington was able to build it into an important college for African Americans.

14. W.E.B. DuBois helped found the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP). The NAACP has since its beginnings been dedicated to improving the conditions of African Americans.

18. Formed in 1909 by a multiracial group of civil rights activists, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) has worked to promote racial equality and end discrimination. The NAACP is the oldest civil rights organization in the United States.

20. The Tuskegee Institute was founded in 1881. Booker T. Washington served as the leader of the college from 1881 until 1915. During his time at the college, Washington was able to build it into an important college for African Americans.

23. Southern states enacted many laws that segregated African Americans from whites. These laws, known as the Jim Crow laws, affected many aspects of daily life and included laws in which blacks were forced to sit in separate areas on trains and were prohibited from attending the same schools as whites. The Jim Crow laws required a policy of "separate but equal" that legally separated African Americans from whites in many situations well into the mid 20th century.
24. Marcus Garvey founded the Universal Negro Improvement Association in 1914 as a group to help African Americans. Garvey was also a strong supporter of the Back to Africa movement, which encouraged African Americans to move to their ancestral homelands.

25. Booker T. Washington believed that African Americans should try to improve their economic situation before trying to achieve equal rights. He thought hard work and education would improve the lives of African Americans. In his "Atlanta Compromise" speech, he said: "No race can prosper till it learns that there is as much dignity in tilling a field as in writing a poem. It is at the bottom of life we must begin, and not at the top."

28. In 1913, Ida Wells-Barnett, an African American civil rights and women's suffrage activist, founded the Alpha Suffrage Club of Chicago. The Alpha Suffrage Club was the first black women's suffrage organization. In addition to her work in the suffrage movement, Ida Wells-Barnett was very outspoken against the practice of lynching. In 1892, she wrote a pamphlet called Southern Horrors: Lynch Law in All Its Phases.

30. Booker T. Washington was a prominent African American leader during the early twentieth century who believed that African Americans could best improve their lives by attending vocational training.

33. W.E.B. DuBois advocated education as a way to improve the status of African Americans. DuBois himself graduated from Harvard and was the first African American to earn a Ph.D. He believed that if the most talented African Americans were able to receive a strong academic education, they could work to improve the situation for African Americans everywhere.

36. In hopes of finding better jobs and escaping the unjust conditions which existed in the South, many African Americans moved from the South to the North in the early 20th century. Many African Americans found jobs in factories, which were located in cities like Chicago, Detroit, and New York. http://www.pbs.org/wnet/aaworld/reference/articles/great_migration.html

37. Poll taxes, literacy tests, and grandfather clauses were all methods used by southern states to prevent African Americans from voting. A poll tax was a tax that was paid when someone went to vote, and African Americans often could not afford to pay it. Literacy tests were used as a way to prove voters could read and that they understood the state constitution. Many African Americans were unable to pass the literacy tests. Grandfather clauses were a way to allow those who could not pass the literacy test or pay the poll tax the right to vote if they, their father, or their grandfather had been eligible to vote on or before January 1, 1867. Few African Americans had been able to vote in 1867.

38. After the Civil War, the Ku Klux Klan started lynching African Americans in order to maintain white supremacy in the South. Members of the Ku Klux Klan did not agree with the new laws granting rights to African Americans that went into effect during Reconstruction.

42. Washington thought African Americans should try to improve their economic situation by hard work and job training, but he did not publicly advocate equal rights for African Americans. Washington thought African Americans should accept discrimination and concentrate on improving their economic status first. This angered some in the African American community who wanted equal rights, especially the members of the Niagara Movement, who thought Washington was not doing enough to help the civil rights movement.

44. Booker T. Washington believed that African Americans should try to improve their economic situation before trying to achieve equal rights. He thought hard work and education would improve the lives of African Americans. In his "Atlanta Compromise" speech, he said: "No race can prosper till it learns that there is as much dignity in tilling a field as in writing a poem. It is at the bottom of life we must begin, and not at the top."

47. The Niagara Movement was an effort to achieve equality for African Americans. W.E.B. Du Bois was one of the leaders of the Niagara Movement, and he advocated that African Americans should have the same rights that whites had. After the Niagara Movement ended in 1911, many involved with it became active in the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP).

48. The Exodusters were African Americans who migrated from the South to Kansas during the late 1800s. Land in Kansas could be purchased fairly cheaply, and African Americans felt they would have more freedom there than in the South. Towns like Nicodemus, Kansas, were built by former slaves during this time.

49. W.E.B. DuBois advocated education as a way to improve the status of African Americans. DuBois himself graduated from Harvard and was the first African American to earn a Ph.D. He believed that if the most talented African Americans were able to receive a strong academic education, they could work to improve the situation for African Americans everywhere.

50. The excerpt is from Washington's 1895 speech known as the "Atlanta Compromise." In it, he expressed his beliefs that African Americans should work hard in their jobs in order to achieve economic stability. He encouraged white people to hire African Americans instead of immigrants. He believed employment opportunities should be given to African Americans and that they would be excellent workers.
